Preserving the Past Preparing for the Future Museum of Murray's art

The Paul Murray Museum A Portrait of Appalachia has just opened in Gatlinburg Tennessee. Thanks to your tremendous support; and with our months of labour; we've turned a circa 1895 house into Paul Murray museum. Preserving this mountain homestead, was a vision fulfilled for Murray. Here history lives on, Murray's art and the Ogle's Smokey Mountain homestead are like a window in time, linking the viewer to the past. This our 3rd location, is apart of his goal to give the history and the art a more lasting legacy. The display

Echos of the Past

"Quietly she sits....an old worn sweater drapes her shoulders...as she looks out to the past, light filters through old panes of glass, softly silhouetting her....eternity...like a queen on her straight back....deep in Southern Appalachia. The day I was there, Aunt Emily now 103, always wearing her hand fastened to chin...told of stories long ago. Now etched in my mind...all those echoes of the past" Paul Murray The newest of Murray's dynamic Pencil comes in 2 Collectible ways:

Lil Zoe' " she had been sitting for me inside most of the day, and I was coming up empty handed. Almost dusk...I looked outside, it was late March, there she was peering into the pond , bare foot, with patches of snow on the ground....I knew that was the image I wanted. There was something of centuries long gone, angelic almost translucent about it." Paul Murray

" In youth & in age Paul captures the sheer vulnerability and quaint charm of these people"JDM
